

Open your image in Photoshop and select the Magic Wand tool.

03. Areas that did not get selected (such as the head area), you need to zoom in on and shift-select with your magic wand, so you don't lose what you have already selected and add the new areas that you want.

02. Select the lines you want to change with the Magic Wand tool by clicking on them. See how they look selected? We call this the "dancing ants" effect.

04. Once you get all the lines selected to your satisfaction, from the top menu go Edit > Stroke, and you will see a dialog box that looks like this:

05. Choose your line weight, color, and where you want the stroke to occur - inside the line, outside the line, or center, and click OK. With a little practice on copies of your document, you will soon get adept at this.
